

My family has greatly enjoyed the relief from telemarketers' phone calls afforded by Wisconsin's strict "No Call List." This also helps my productivity at my business since I no longer have to tolerate the waste of my time formerly caused by having to answer telemarketing calls. Besides, who wants to have his dinner - or other enjoyable activities - interrupted by the annoyance of an unwelcome telephone intruder. We pay for this communication device and deserve the right to have it remain private. As for availing cell phone numbers to telemarketers - forget about it! Answering a cell phone call while driving should be kept to a minimum for safety reasons. It would be against the public's interests for the FCC to cave in to industry pressure on this matter.
